

ADEQUATE YEARLY PROGRESS (AYP) STATUS
School Years 2005-06 to 2007-08

Florida

Percentage of Total Public Schools Not Making AYP
and in Improvement/Corrective Action

Source: State Department of Education websites, NEA state affiliates, and press reports. This chart is subject to change because states periodically revise their lists. Because of variations in state terminology and data reporting, and rule changes issued by the U.S. Department of Education as well as numerous state accountability plan changes, these percentages are not comparable across states. The percentage of schools not making AYP for at least one year include the number of schools not making AYP for two years or more. Some states only list Title I schools as not making AYP for two or more years. Some state percentages include both Title I and non-Title I schools, but other states only apply NCLB consequences to Title I schools. To be removed from the school improvement list, a school or district must make AYP for two consecutive years. Some of the schools/districts listed in this category made AYP last year, but remain on the list until they also make AYP in the second year. Also note that, in some cases, state information is not yet available or has not been released. For more information, contact Manjusri Ratnayaka at 202.822.7126 (MRatnayaka@nea.org). As of January 7, 2008.