

Dajsha Williams is a junior at The Ohio State University studying Early Childhood Education. She is passionate about using her voice to advocate for those around her that are future teachers, current teachers, and students.

She has been using her voice to better education long before her time in college. During her high school experience, Dajsha was elected for leadership positions including the 2019-2020 National Student President for Educators Rising.

During college she has been connected with her local and state union. She is the 2022-2023 Ohio Educators Association's Aspiring Educators Chairperson. Her calls for this year is to increase student membership for the National Aspiring Educators, continuing advocacy work for racial and social justice issues in our schools today, and advocating for all future educators- like herself.
