STEP 1: BUILD CHAPTER LEADER SUPPORT

WHAT are the goals at this stage?
Chapter leaders understand the importance and potential benefits of community schools and embrace chapter involvement.

WHAT concrete objectives should you work toward?
Executive Board passes a resolution endorsing community schools, advocating for the district to engage interest-holders in an open, inclusive, collaborative planning and implementation process.

Rep Council passes a resolution endorsing community schools, advocating for the district to engage interest-holders in an open, inclusive, collaborative planning and implementation process.

WHY are these goals and objectives important?
A resolution by either the Executive Board or the Rep Council (depending on chapter practices/culture) will establish the official position of the chapter as being in favor of community schools and sets the public expectation that planning and implementation will be open, inclusive, and collaborative.

A resolution also makes sure everyone within chapter leadership is informed, knowledgeable and onboard, which will be especially important if the district resists and the chapter is forced to organize a public pressure campaign.

HOW can you achieve these goals and objectives?
- One-on-one conversations with chapter leaders
- Invite CTA staff to present to Executive Board/Rep Council on community schools
- Attend a regional community schools information session as a leadership team to learn more about community schools
- Attend CTA conferences like the CTA Issues Conference and/or the CTA Summer Institute as a leadership team to learn more about community schools
- Visit community schools in another district and meet with leaders of the local chapter to learn about their community schools
- Identify who among chapter leaders (or possibly a new leader) will be the point-person/lead on the chapter’s community schools work

STEP 2: BUILD MEMBER SUPPORT

WHAT are the goals at this stage?
Members understand the importance and potential benefits of community schools and embrace chapter involvement.

WHAT concrete objectives should you work toward?
Regular communication and engagement with all members regarding community schools - the Why, updates on district activities and district/chapter collaboration (or lack thereof), celebrate wins and accomplishments, etc. Communication should be two-way, both sharing information out to members and listening to members’ suggestions and concerns. Member feedback should inform chapter actions.

WHY are these goals and objectives important?
Member support is essential for a sustainable community schools initiative; if it remains completely leadership-driven, chapter leadership will constantly have to expend time and energy encouraging members to participate and support when members don’t see the value of the community schools.

Good communication also makes sure members are informed, knowledgeable and onboard, which will be especially important if the district resists and the chapter is forced to organize a pressure campaign.

HOW can you achieve these goals and objectives?
- Develop a member engagement plan
- Send out/publicize Executive Board/Rep Council resolutions in support of community schools
- Road show/site visits - listen, explain, answer questions, build support
- Public forum - listen, explain, answer questions, build support
- Zoom meetings - listen, explain, answer questions, build support; post recordings/highlights to chapter website
- Newsletters and print communications
- Digital communications, social media
- Form a Community Schools Committee and draw on a diverse cross-section of members to work toward community schools and advise the organizing team and/or bargaining team or whichever group is driving the chapter’s community schools work.

STEP 3: BUILD COMMUNITY SUPPORT

WHAT are the goals at this stage?
Families and the community understand the importance and potential benefits of community schools to students, educators, families, and the community, and embrace union-community partnerships.

WHAT concrete objectives should you work toward?
Regular communication with families and the community regarding community schools – the Why, updates on district activities and district/chapter collaboration (or lack thereof), celebrate wins and accomplishments, etc. Communication should be two-way, both sharing information out to the community and listening to the community’s suggestions and concerns. Community feedback should inform chapter actions.

WHY are these goals and objectives important?
To be true to community school models and values, families and the community MUST be involved as equals and co-leaders. Having partnerships with families and the community will help ensure that the district engages in an open, inclusive planning and implementation process and agrees to shared-leadership proposals.

HOW can you achieve these goals and objectives?
• Form a chapter Community Engagement Team and train members to speak with/listen to community members and community groups (provide them with talking points). Coordinate with the chapter’s organizing team and/or bargaining team or whichever group is driving the chapter’s community schools work.
• Do community mapping to identify potential allies
• Do a power analysis of the community to identify influential people/organizations, potential allies, and roadblocks
• Develop a community engagement plan
• Send out/publicize Executive Board/Rep Council resolutions in support of community schools
• Visits parent centers at schools and local community centers, attend community meetings and events, organize house meetings - explain, answer questions, build support
• Community Zoom meetings - listen, explain, answer questions, build support; post recordings/highlights to chapter website
• Parent-targeted newsletters and print communications
• Parent-targeted digital communications, social media
  o Remember that communications with parents may be more effective if they are multilingual
• Reach out to and develop more formal relationships with like-minded community organizations
• Consider contacting local press and local elected officials about the benefits of community schools and the current opportunities, and the importance of an open, inclusive planning and implementation process and shared leadership

STEP 4: BUILD TOWARD COLLABORATIVE PLANNING & IMPLEMENTATION

WHAT are the goals at this stage?
District commits to an open, inclusive, and collaborative planning and implementation process that includes students, educators, families, and the community.

WHAT concrete objectives should you work toward?
School board passes a resolution endorsing community schools and committing the district to engage interest-holders in an open, inclusive, collaborative planning and implementation process.

District signs an MOU agreeing to engage interest-holders in an open, inclusive, collaborative planning and implementation process.

Regular planning and/or implementation meetings are held involving a variety of interest-holders with different perspectives. All input is considered and impacts the design of the community schools plan and/or implementation.

An open, inclusive, multi-lingual, multi-modal community needs assessment is conducted to determine which schools should participate as well as what services and supports the community believes they need.

Community School Coordinator positions are collaboratively developed, flown, and hired (and possibly negotiated) for each community school. During the planning phase, Community School Coordinators focus on building relationships with the community and making the needs assessment more inclusive by engaging with traditionally underserved and under-listened-to members of the community.

WHY are these goals and objectives important?
Without an MOU between the district and unions, the district is under no legal or regulatory obligation to collaborate with educators, unions, or the community. Ideally, the district will welcome open, inclusive collaboration, or can at least be reasoned with and convinced to collaborate, but a stubborn/intransigent district will need to be pushed to collaborate through chapter and community organizing and public pressure campaigns.

HOW can you achieve these goals and objectives?
Create an organizing plan focused on ensuring an open, inclusive, and collaborative planning and implementation process. As we work through the first and second rounds of Community School Grants, we are seeing three distinct starting positions from districts, each of which will require a different organizing response from chapters and the community to secure an open, inclusive, and collaborative planning and implementation process:

a. uninformed
b. interested and willing to plan collaboratively with unions and other interest-holders
c. interested but unwilling to plan collaboratively with unions or other interest-holders

Each district stance will require a different response from chapters and communities during the application and planning phases, working toward the goal of inclusive and collaborative planning and implementation.

STEP 5: BUILD STRUCTURES FOR SHARED DECISION MAKING

WHAT are the goals at this stage?
District commits to a permanent, ongoing, open, inclusive, and collaborative shared-decision-making governance structure for the community schools that includes students, educators, families, and the community.

WHAT concrete objectives should you work toward?
District agrees to permanent contract language describing the shared-decision-making governance structure of the community schools, including:

- who will be part of the “Steering Committee,”
- who will select/elect/appoint Steering Committee members,
- how often the Steering Committee will meet,
- the scope of the Steering Committee’s authority, and
- how Steering Committee decisions will be made.

The ideal (the “gold standard”) would be to have permanent contract language on shared governance signed before the district applies for an Implementation Grant, but more realistically (the “silver standard”), the chapter may have to negotiate a shared governance agreement during early implementation. But be advised – it will be more difficult to secure agreement and shape the governance structure once the district has begun to implement its own model. Delay and it will become a struggle to restructure what has already been put in place rather than to establish something correctly and inclusively from the inception.

WHY are these goals and objectives important?
For long-term stability and success of a democratic community schools model, leadership structures and authorities must be written, clear and binding on all parties (particularly districts). This is what guarantees that educators and community members will have a voice and shared leadership with school and district leaders.

HOW can you achieve these goals and objectives?
Create an organizing plan and escalating campaign to publicly pressure the district to come to agreement on a permanent, ongoing shared-decision-making governance structure. This may require levels of organizing and coordination with community allies on par with what chapters are accustomed to doing during contract negotiations over traditional subjects like salary and benefits. [And again, THIS is why building member support and community coalitions in prior steps is essential.]

Develop a system of regular communication to keep members and the community informed on community schools governance as well as successes and challenges. This will help sustain engagement, transparent governance, and maintain public pressure on the district to continue to be a good partner.
