About Me

I am a sophomore at the University of Alabama. I am majoring in elementary education and special education with a double minor in the liberal arts and transdisciplinary research.

Purpose

Education is my purpose. I aim to transform learning for students with disabilities and be a voice for Asian American, low-income, and biracial students—proving that every child deserves more than a system; they deserve understanding, representation, and a meaningful chance to thrive.

How

At UA, I'm earning dual degrees to become an inclusive educator. With certifications across disciplines, leadership experience, and plans for a Ph.D., I'll continue teaching while advocating for equity—shaping classrooms and systems where every student, especially those with disabilities, sees a role model who understands them.
